

Ms Tamara Yankovich

OECD Nuclear Energy Agency

Biography

Dr Yankovich has more than 30 years of practical experience working on complex nuclear sites. She is a recognized expert in environmental protection, with significant experience in engagement of diverse stakeholders in support of nuclear decision making.

She worked at IAEA for 9 years, supporting countries to establish, strengthen and implement regulations to protect people and the environment. She is currently Deputy Head of Human Aspects of Nuclear Safety at OECD NEA in Paris. She has two social science diplomas from University for Peace, Centre for Executive Education.